

I have never enjoyed radio as much as I have satellite radio. Other than college radio stations the airways have become a generic, stagnant pool of the same 10 pop songs served to me by large conglomerate broadcasters trying to maximize their ad dollars.

XM is a refreshing diverse product allowing many unheard artists to be heard. Please do not stifle new technology and diverse programming and continue to feed the interests of corporate radio at the expense of diverse programming and innovate technology.

I look at any action by the FCC to stifle satellite radio as limiting my choice as a consumer and a violation of first amendment rights.

Respectfully,
Paul Kuehnel
